

HERRICK AND WIFE REPORTED LIVING APT

Boston educational and literary circles are keenly interested in the report from Chicago today that Robert Herrick, the novelist, Harvard graduate and former Technology professor, and his wife have parted and that the filing of a suit for divorce only marks the opening of another chapter in the Herrick romance.

The separation of the Herricks has been rumored for a couple of years. The fact that the author has failed to visit his wife during her present arduous illness in Chicago is taken to indicate that the couple are really parted.

Today's report caused little surprise among the Herrick friends in Boston, as it was generally known that their temperamental differences in their domestic life and that this incompatibility resulted in marital infidelity.

Friend friends declared the cause of the separation was the revolutionary views the writer had on marriage and sex.

Views in "TOGETHER."

Professor Herrick's sex views are strikingly brought out in his novel "Together." In this, according to the critics, he reduced matrimony to a state of "quivering nervous and tragic fatality." The book was pronounced a spiritual port for moderns and the author was declared to be a desperate underdog of souls. Here are some of the sentiments the author expresses in "Together."

"Marriage is an awful problem for a woman, any woman who has individuality, who thinks."

"It takes time to get it. If it doesn't, why he hangs it in the closet, so to speak, and takes it out just as he has to."

"Marriage is all the time or give it up altogether."

"Marriage is all the time, whether you come or not."

ON THE PERFECT MARRIAGE.

"Perfect marriage is comradeship, together."

"Marriage is a state of personal gratification, the best anyone can make with man."

"Marriage is a woman's symbol of the perfect, not merely success, nor husband content, but state of passion and complete union."

"Real love can exist on forty dollars a week."

When Mrs. Herrick and her husband first reports that she plans to divorce him, she has established a reputation at Newport, N. H. There, Philip is now attending school in the East. Some of the novelists books are "The Common Law," "The Web of Life," "The Gospel of Freedom," "The Day Who Wins," and "The Real World."

Tango Doomed, Says Lady Constance

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson predicts that after we are through with all our acrobatic stunts we will return to the steady old dance, old music, the minut and the dance.

The present day music is sensual and the dances are sensual," she said. "There is nothing sweet, nothing inspiring in them."

Musio Settlement Taught 340 Pupils

The Boston Music School Settlement in the North End in its annual report states that 340 pupils have been given a musical education during the past year. A day's vacation was given to 743 children and parents last summer.

Charles A. Prouty to Run for U. S. Senate

BURLINGTON, Vt., Feb. 26.—A party of Republicans from Orleans County called upon Charles A. Prouty and later announced that the interstate commerce commissioner had expressed a willingness to accept a candidacy for the United States Senate in the year of Senator W. F. Billingsham will expire on March 4, 1915.

Pankhurst Asks King for Interview

LONDON, Feb. 26.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst has written the King asking him to receive a deputation from the Women's Social and Political Union, she concludes.

"Because women are without the vote there are in our midst today evicted workers, blind slaves, outraged children and innocent mothers and their babes stricken with horrible disease. It is for the sake and in the name of these unhappy mothers of our sex that we ask Your Majesty for an audience, and we are confident that it will be granted to us."

Witte Fears Liquor May Ruin Russia

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 26.—During a discussion of the bill amending regulations for the sale of spirits, Count Witte asked that serious mistakes perpetrated by himself might be rectified. The only means of salvation, he continued, lay in limiting the revenue from the spirits monopoly.

THAW FIGHTS FOR $13,000 TO SWELL INCOME

CONCORD, N. H., Feb. 26.—Harry K. Thaw today is interested in a new court fight. The outcome, he expects, will be the swelling of his already meager income by just $13,000.

This will be in addition to the $100,000 he will shortly receive unless, within the designated sixty-day limit, he is declared insane in the Pennsylvania courts—a remote possibility.

Thaw, through his Pittsburgh attorneys, has taken exception to the filing of Pennsylvania Railroad and Standard Oil stock valued at $13,000. It was filed as a part of the estate left by Thaw's father, but should be added, he holds, to the income.

A Federal injunction was today expected to prevent Hal Reid, alleged cousin of the late ambassador to the Court of St. James, author and moving picture expert, from exhibiting anywhere in America the films he took in the United States District Court here at the opening of the recent hearing on Thaw's plea for a writ of habeas corpus.

Thaw, W. T. Jerome, Judge Aldrich and other notables all appear on this film roll.

First, the fact that the committee was not a permanent body, but was created for a specific purpose, was a significant factor in its decision to accept the offer. The committee was created by the House of Representatives in 1947, and its mandate was to investigate the activities of the Communist Party in the United States. The committee was composed of members of the House, and its findings were reported to the House. The committee's report was a landmark document in the history of the Cold War, and it played a significant role in the development of the McCarthy era. The committee's findings were that the Communist Party was a threat to the national security of the United States, and that it was engaged in a campaign to subvert the government. This report led to the passage of the Smith Act, which made it illegal to belong to or support the Communist Party. The committee's work was a crucial part of the effort to root out communism in the United States, and its findings were a major factor in the development of the Cold War. It is a wise selection that the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association has made in accepting the offer of the Essex County golf links for the Metropolitan Championship, May 25 to 29. Mrs. E. E. Sanford expressed the links for the club unconditionally at any time. It is good to know that the club, although 200 yards short of the standard, will be the third time the women's championship has been held there. This will be the third time the women's championship has been held there. This will be the third time the women's championship has been held there.

NEW DEPARTURE IN AREA FOOTBALL. The football team of the Annapolis Naval Academy will make a new departure next year, according to the University of Pennsylvania.

There is no question about the familiarity of Annapolis sailors with the Eastern Field. "Franklin" in fact, with the exception of a cruise played at Princeton some years ago, and the one in New York last year, the bulk of the Army-Navy contests have been held on that ground.

It is true that it is a more frequent sight of Army and Navy football teams, but all their games, with the exception of the naval two-and-a-half-day regatta, are played at the disposed invitation of the naval authorities.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"GOD bless," said the Manicure Lady, "I had a good time today about having money like a thief. I don't mean having money for a rainy day, but I mean enjoying for years to get a manicure."

"There was a old gent come in here today to have his nails cut. He said that he had always taken some kind of care of his own nails until he retired from business, but that now he was spending a little of the big fortune that he had piled up, and took a notion to have a manicure, with all the other high life he was enjoying."

"He said 'enjoying,' but he wasn't enjoying a minute that he was sitting there, and I bet he hadn't had a really happy day since he was a younger man, striving to get his coin together."

"I would be willing to take a chance and trade places with him," said the Head Barber. "I guess he would have a good time if he really wanted to. Give me the backrest and I'll show you how to have the run for it."

"But you are younger than this old gent," said the Manicure Lady, "and you was always more or less of a sport, anyway. You see, George, it is a whole lot different for a sport or a keep on being one than it is for some old scrapper to try to make himself over when he is nearly old enough to plant."

"That old chap seemed kind of nice & old, dearest home to me. True, there was there, but there didn't seem to be no signs of life inside. When he talked, his eyes didn't light up none, and he didn't act any more excited than a little weeded clam. He was there, having his nails cut the same way I suppose he opened his mail, or washed his face, but there wasn't no more spark to him than to a dead fire. What good did it do him? What good did it do him? No good, indeed. The old fellow will go along looking after a good time like a blind kid looking for a toy, and after awhile he will be dead and forgotten, and his money will fly this way and that way. I feel sorry for him."

"I can't see how nobody can feel sorry for a gent with a backrest," said the Head Barber. "I know I had a backrest I wouldn't be around for no sympathy." "This old gent wasn't looking for sympathy," said the Manicure Lady. "I didn't say he was. I just said he was a sport. He never had one-third the good time in his life that he had when he had the old gent here. He was raising a family, besides, while he was journeying through life and living by the way. If father had went along all those years without ever taking a little nip with his old piece of without seeing no shows or boxing matches or races, I suppose that by now he would have at least as big a roll as the old fellow was speaking of, but as it is, I believe that he is a lot happier for having had some of the good times that he has had. Wilfred says that he is going to pattern his life after his father's as far as possible, but I am afraid that he will never have as old a gent's earning capacity or other capacity."

"He would like nothing better than to be old now and have a nice bank account to string along," said the Head Barber. "I don't see much chance, the way things is now, to ever have a real roll in my old age, but I am going to try."

"No you ain't," declared the Manicure Lady. "Not while the horses keeps running races."

Up-to-Date Jokes

An amusing story is told of a Devonshire man who invited a socialist to visit his estate and see what he had done for the village. As they drove about the quiet reached their home and the boys and girls "bushy" and "bushy". When they passed a man smoking his pipe, who took no notice of the scene.

"Ah!" said the socialist, "that's the sort of man for me. No bowing and scraping."

"No," replied the squire, "that's the village idiot."

"No, no," said the socialist, "I am not so sure of that," said the socialist, "I am not so sure of that."

"The doctor was bandaging the small boy's arm after vaccination, when the little chap interrupted him."

"Put it on the other arm, doctor," he said.

"Why, no," said the physician, "I want to put the vaccine on your arm, so that the boys at school won't hit you on it."

"Put it on the other arm, doc," reiterated the small boy. "You don't know the fellows at our school."

Gulfer—Confused you, boy; you made me miss that putt!

Gulfer—I didn't do nothing, sir.

Gulfer—Yes, you did. It was your blundering blundering.

Cable—I didn't "no-loop, sir."

Gulfer—Of course you didn't. It was the first time you've missed, and I allowed for it, you idiot!

A good story is told of Lord Cromwell and an Irishman who met each other once in a New York hotel. On being asked what part of Ireland he came from, Paddy replied:

"Well, as a matter of fact, at one time I was one of your discontented tenants."

Bashful Bob

The Amusing Adventures of a Shy Young Man

No. 3—There is more than one kind of coming

By STELLA FLORES

THUMPING along in the woods, his gun over his shoulder, Bob was musing over the rumors he had heard of a great white bear that had escaped from a circus. Suddenly a stream shielded off ahead. He was just in time to send a bullet into the heart of a great white monster that reared above a slender figure of a terrified girl. Her companion had taken to a tree, and the story would have had a grim ending if Bob had not arrived in the nick of time. "What cowards some fellows are," he said to himself as he trudged home.

But that evening he remembered that in the flush of excitement he had promised to go to the girl's home that night—her sister's birthday party. And he was one of these rare folk who think a promise should be kept. He went, but after the first few moments of agony at meeting so many girls he took advantage of the staircase, and the rest of the evening he spent snugly concealed behind the railings. And the fellow who had climbed the tree was the most popular chap there!

REASON WHY I LOVE YOU

By LAUREL RHYMES

YOU ask me why I love you? Ask the stars why they do shine,
Go ask the birds that fill the air with tune why they do sing;
Go ask the flowers why they bud and bloom so sweet in Spring;
Go ask the birds that fill the air with tune why they do sing;
Go ask the gentle zephyrs why they whisper 'neath the trees;
Go ask the sparkling brooklets why they flow into the seas;
Go ask the dancing, glancing waves, why they kiss the shore;
Go ask the glorious Summer moon, what is she shining for;
If they can give an answer, then I, too, shall try to say
What makes me think you dearer every minute of the day.
I think that God, who has ordained that all these things should be,
Has given a heart most loving—just for loving thee.

Dayzee Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

THEY were the guests in the parlor at the house of Lyndell and John, Agnes, little cousin of Dayzee Mayme.

One sat on the very edge of the lounge. Nervous and apprehensive he looked as if all his life he had had no more slow than a rabbit in snow time.

The other, fat and ponderous, overflowed the largest chair in the room. It is not necessary to name his prototype further than to say that a great many of his fortune have been in coming home.

It was the nervous man's turn, a little flustered at being the centre of attention, he related in a thin, squeaky voice:

"That's the way," said the fat man, "in the early days, a certain man took a little in a mine camp and died. The boys decided to give him a funeral by importing a hearse from the next town."

"The procession was winding over the hill, the hearse in front, with a lot of coaches, an orchestra and a band of brass instruments."

"A race! The mourners were quick to see the opportunity, and digging their spurs in their mounts started over, overhauling the hearse from the rear. It reached the cemetery gates."

"The miner to whom fell the task of accompanying the widow came back East of her bereavement, recounted the man's illness and death, and the runaway. Wishing to assuage her grief, he asked her to go with him to the next town."

"The nervous man waited for laughter, but the woman's face met each a glance that seemed as painful as a blow. She asked what part of Ireland he came from. Paddy replied:

"Well, as a matter of fact, at one time I was one of your discontented tenants."

Lord Cromwell glanced at him in surprise.

"Yes," continued Paddy, thoughtfully, "I was. But here are you and I drinking together, while in Ireland, I could have shot close enough to you to hit you with a shotgun."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

MAKE NO EFFORTS

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am deeply in love with a young man one year my senior and would like to know how to win his love. ANXIOUS. IT is my observation that a woman cannot win a man's attention and love by showing that she cares for neither. The independent-hearted girl, my dear, is more attractive than the one with her heart on her sleeve, and her hope set on prey.

CERTAINLY NOT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am in love with a young man eight years my senior. He said he loved me and would wait for me till I met him. But you tell me the difference in age would deprive me of happiness. ANXIOUS.

This difference in your ages is not great enough to consider. I advise him for his good name in waiting till you are older grown, instead of marrying you when you are too young to really know your own mind.

DON'T TRY

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am eighteen and deeply in love with a man of twenty-seven. He does not seem to care for me. How can I win his love? C. L.

YOU are only eighteen, so that the winning of any man's love is not urgently important. Try to show him of him; acquire other interests; be your own natural self, and if he is the man intended for you he will win his love all the more ardently if it is unthought.

Do You Know That—

In 1811 coal was sold only in bulk and to light stores. The only stores that existed burned upon it. They used very little light, and were very expensive and troublesome to run. There were no better matches. These were not invented until 1828, fifteen years later.

Coal was as expensive a fuel as much as it was, and it was the last years of the French war that both coal and wood rose to terrible prices.

fatal to the promises to the people, fatal to the party honest to the country, begun at home. We should be honorable to our own people before we are prodigal of our honor with a nation which has never been honorable to any country where it was against her interest.

Was there ever a greater violation of honor than Great Britain's continuance in Egypt, where lies the Suez Canal? Every hour of British occupation of that country is a continuing breach of faith. Have we forgotten the Boer War and the perdition destruction of the brave little Boer Republic?

There comes a time when we must respect us so long as we know our rights and dare maintain them. The chancelleries of the world will only laugh at us when we are bluffed out of our vital interests and rights.

This is the only one among a multitude of curious observations made by Mr. Ward. Some of the things described by him are known to all, but until he invented his method of getting down among the fish themselves, and carrying his photographic instruments with him, no such intimate knowledge of the habits and the nature of life under water was possessed by anybody.

D.—The telephone in its present form was invented by Alexander Graham Bell of Washington, for whom it was named. Hundreds of improvements have been made by other men, but the principle is Bell's.

Editor—Benjamin Franklin was not only an author and a scientist, but also a statesman and an order. His efforts on behalf of the American colonists in Paris much to bring about the assistance of France, which was of tremendous help to the colonists in the Revolution. Many historians believe Franklin to have been one of the very greatest Americans.

F. R. S.—Guantanamo is a town on a deep water harbor on the southeastern coast of Cuba, made famous as situated in the hands of the United States. It was granted as a base to this country by arrangement with Cuba at the time the Spanish War was over.
